What we're looking for?

We are seeking enthusiastic and capable Graduates to support sustained growth in a number of our key service areas.

If you are looking for a career in consultancy, we would welcome an application from you if you have knowledge in Acoustics.

About the roles:

As a Graduate Consultant, you will work closely with Project Managers and other Consultants, providing essential support on projects and to specific business areas. Initial assignments may typically include background research, review of planning policy, data collection and analysis, report writing and contributing to discussions in meetings. Within a short period of time, Graduate Consultants are given responsibility for coordinating tasks within projects.

The role will involve a diverse range of projects and exposure to some of the most high profile projects in the UK across a range of sectors, including: government and policy; railway, road and air infrastructure; property and regeneration; community; and, construction.

What we're looking for from you?

Successful graduate candidates will:

- Have a degree in a relevant field or equivalent experience
- Be able to demonstrate an understanding of the discipline for which they are applying
- Be organised, flexible, motivated, professional, enthusiastic and proactive with a strong work ethic

It would be an advantage to have an understanding of EIA

Your training and development:

We will support you in your personal development and provide a wide range of training, including:

- Structured graduate development programme
- Workshops run by our experienced team

- Seminars and presentations from relevant industry professionals in a wide range of environmental and sustainability disciplines
- External project management training

Temple also encourages innovation through open and collaborative continuous improvement.

Please send a covering letter and full CV to recruitment@templegroup.co.uk clearly identifying the position/grade you are applying for and where you saw it advertised.
